On October 22, the above picture was taken after the brass plate on the Andrew Price Memorial (which was removed by vandals a good many years ago) had been replaced. It is hoped the pathway to the monument will soon be rebuilt.

Pictured are Dr. Paul Price, State Geologist, who was responsible for building the monument and Dr. N. R. Price who helped. All of the rocks and 30 bags of cement had to be carried up the hill. The late E. C. Moore was listed as a helper but last week we learned that Thomas Moore, then a very young boy, didn't get credit for carrying all the water up the hill.

A memorial of unique and striking design has been erected one mile north of Marlinton on a beautifully wooded hillside, on the road to the fair grounds within sight of the Seneca Trail, to the memory of the late Andrew Price, lawyer, editor, author, geologist and president of the West Virginia Historical Society.

The memorial is built of stones which Mr. Price had collected from the various geological formations in all parts of the state. On close examination of the rocks in the monument, you will find that each one is literally filled with the organisms themselves and imprints of former living organisms. It is unique and beautiful in its rugged appearance. It is doubtful if there is anything like it in the country.

The monument at its base is 10 feet square, while the top segment is three feet square and extends about four feet above the top of the second tier. It is located about fifty feet above the road, but a well graded, winding trail with native stone steps leads to it. Buried in the monument is

Mr. Price's hammer that he carried with him on his collecting trips. Also a small sealed bottle containing certain historical information. The State Road Commission contemplates placing two small signs to mark its location from the Seneca trail.

During his lifetime Mr. Price amassed quite a large collection of fossils. His woodshed which he converted into a "museum" was literally filled at the time of his death. He was the first person to locate the trilobites in the Huntersville chert (a formation that is found in Pocahontas and Greenbrier counties) on the subject of which he presented a paper at the Elkins meeting of the West Virginia Academy of Science.

His collection consisted of brachiopods, plectyopods, gastropods, corals, erinoids, blastoids, trilobites, seaweed and numerous other specimens. The collection of fossils was Andrew Price's hobby. And the subject was his favorite one; he was a fine conversationalist.

Paul Price, (although of the same name, no relation) assistant geologist on the West Virginia survey and instructor in the department of geology at the university, was a close friend of Andrew Price and on a visit there. Mr. and Mrs. Price presented him with two lots on which to build a cottage. Now Paul Price, who was instrumental in the erection of the monument, has given these lots for the erection of the monument and contemplates dedicating the grounds to the Sons of the American Revolution of which Andrew Price was a member. Assisting him in this tribute to Andrew Price were Edward Moore and George J. Cleveland, the latter a son-in-law of Andrew Price, Dr. N. R. Price, a brother, all of Marlinton, and Charles Furbee, of Morgantown.

Mrs. Andrew Price left the disposal of her husband's fossil collection in the hands of Paul Price, so he selected the better specimens for the geological museum at the university. Room is being made to put them on display.

Mr. Price was born January 28, 1871, attended public schools, L. L. B. College of Law, West Virginia University 1892 served as postmaster at Marlinton, was a student of history, author of West Virginia anthropology, "Western Waters and Dreams," a book of poems. He was editor of the Pocahontas Times, a Democrat, Presbyterian, Kiwanian, member of the Sons of the Revolution, Academy of Science, president of West Virginia Historical Society and at one time was president of West Virginia Game and Fish Association. He died on March 26, 1930.

Leo Young, of Durbin, says the October issue is his last as editor of "Wildlife Notes," official publication of West Virginia Wildlife Federation, Inc. A new editor has not been named.
